A little later in the day, a lightning flash lit up the sky and illuminated a crevice in a nearby cave which I could see from here. I approached and saw that it was a deserted place lit by a dull white light. A small sound caught my attention and I walked towards it. It was a small metal box and I picked it up. The closer I looked at it, the more curious I became - this was some kind of engine, mounted on the box were two long tubes connected to each other by a wing-shaped piece.

I placed the engine on the ground and examined everything more closely. Then suddenly there were voices, calling me from some distance away in some unknown language. I picked up my new found treasure and ran towards the spot where it came from. Soon I found myself in front of an enormous cave with the entrance lit by the same dull white light. The voices were coming from inside.

The entrance to this cave was guarded by a large, humanoid creature armed with a long spear. It stood at the threshold and examined me carefully from its high vantage point, while I set down my engine and prepared for a fight. When it saw my weapons it shouted something in its language and stood aside to let me enter, lowering its spear while keeping a close eye on me. I walked cautiously into the cave where several other creatures were going about their business. They paid no attention to me at first, but after a while one approached and said something in a surprisingly gentle voice. It raised its spear in a threatening manner but I drew my sword and they all backed away.

There was a small fire in the middle of the cave and my new friend was preparing food. It gestured me to come closer and I walked up to a small stream where it had placed a boiler, with a pipe leading from it up to its mouth, which had been blocked by some kind of cinder brick blocking the entrance. After clearing this obstruction from the fire, the demon poured water from the boiler into its mouth causing steam to emerge from its gaping maw. It then passed me some sort of flat bread with salted meat on top. I ate all that was offered to me and then lay down on a rock nearby.

After a while the demon came up to me and put a cup of something from its own hand into mine, making it motion towards its mouth so I could sip from it. I did so and it took the cup from my hands, drinking from it as well. After a while it returned the cup back to me and sat down beside me. It spoke again in a very soft voice, asking about my adventures. Before long we were chatting away happily together until one of them made a sound nearby warning us of another approaching intruder.
